FOREWORD

As a small island state with no natural resources, Singapore's quest for security and resilience has been a constant, relentless imperative since independence. We have tried to convert existential vulnerabilities into strategic opportunities through an urgent exercise of human imagination and innovation. This was only achievable through continuous investment in our people. The Singapore Cooperation Programme (SCP) reflects our belief that a country's most valuable asset is our human capital. Since its establishment in 1992, over 125,000 participants from more than 170 developing countries have participated in our programmes.

The global order today is undergoing a rapid transition. Against the backdrop of a shifting geopolitical balance, the international consensus for free trade, economic integration, and globalisation is fraying. We are also grappling with disruptions such as climate change and the ongoing digital revolution.

We must work fast to identify solutions to these future challenges. During our recently-concluded ASEAN Chairmanship, Singapore launched the ASEAN Smart Cities Network – an inclusive and collaborative platform for cities within ASEAN and beyond to work towards the common goal of smart and sustainable urbanisation. Building on this foundation, Singapore will continue to help build greater capacity in smart cities development, which we have made a key training cluster in the 2019 SCP Calendar. We have also launched a new “Climate Action” cluster under our Climate Action Package to develop capacity in long-term climate mitigation and risk adaptation strategies. This is part of Singapore’s commitment to supporting fellow developing countries’ efforts to be climate resilient.

The SCP was originally established to pay forward the assistance that Singapore received from the international community in our early years of independence. As we mark the 40th anniversary of the Buenos Aires Plan of Action for Promoting and Implementing Technical Cooperation Among Developing Countries, a growing number of the SCP’s Third Country Training Programme partners now hail from the Global South. I hope that the SCP will continue to be a useful platform for South-South cooperation and triangular cooperation in helping our fellow developing countries achieve the 2030 Agenda for Sustainable Development.

Thank you for your support for the SCP. I look forward to welcoming you to Singapore, and continuing to work together to build a better, more sustainable, and resilient future.

Dr Vivian Balakrishnan
Minister of Foreign Affairs
